

COOLING OF DISC BRAKES ON A TRAIN

The report describes experiments to measure cooling rates of wheel mounted brake discs on a train. The results are compared against laboratory data in order to validate the use of theoretical predictions in their application to train conditions.

It is concluded that shielding by preceding structures under the train, by wheel rim and pads can reduce cooling appreciably.